Schools Encouraged to Apply for Literacy Grants

State Superintendent Kirsten Baesler has encouraged North Dakota school districts and early childhood care providers to apply for grant funds that will help strengthen the reading, writing, and speaking skills of the state's young people.

A legislative committee recently gave the Department of Public Instruction permission to begin distributing funds from the $43.9 million U.S. Department of Education grant.

School districts and early childhood care providers may apply for a share of the money, which will be distributed over five years. Training sessions on how to fill out grant applications began on January 14. The application deadline is March 1.

The grants will be focused on benefiting children living in low-income homes, those with disabilities, children who are homeless or in foster care, and those who are learning English as a second language. More detailed information about the Comprehensive Literacy State Development grant, including information about applying, can be found at <https://www.nd.gov/dpi/nd-comprehensive-literacy-state-development-clsd>.

Superintendent Evaluation Deadline March 15

North Dakota law requires that a school board complete the superintendent's summative evaluation process BEFORE MARCH 15. This means all paperwork, compilations, and public discussion of the evaluation must occur before March 15. A board cannot complete the process if they wait until the March meeting.

It is best to begin the process early in February to ensure compliance with the statutory deadline. The statute requires that the superintendent be evaluated using a satisfactory or unsatisfactory rating.

Legal Spotlight

A Refresher on the Recognition Process

by Amy De Kok, NDSBA Legal Counsel

It is that time of year again— negotiations season. There are likely several districts that will be starting the process in the very near future. Before the board gets too far into planning for the actual negotiation meetings with their teachers, it is important to review and understand the required steps and deadlines that must be completed before negotiations may begin.

In order to negotiate, either the board or the teachers must provide notice to the other of their desire to negotiate at least sixty (60) days before the contract anniversary date (typically July 1). There are some districts whose negotiated agreement provides for a different (often earlier) deadline to provide such notice. Thus, you should always be aware of this initial deadline well in advance and plan accordingly. If notice is not provided by the deadline, the other party is not required to negotiate. If the board initiates negotiations, the board should issue notice to the teachers and request that petitions describing an appropriate negotiating unit and seeking recognition of a representative organization should be filed with the business manager by a specific date. Regardless of who initiates the negotiations process (board or teachers), there are certain steps required by law. During these steps, the board recognizes the group of employees with which it will negotiate and recognizes the organization representing this group. These steps are referred to as the “recognition process.” In practice, the teachers typically file one petition with both requests. While there is nothing improper about this, it is important that the board still handle each step in the appropriate order.

Once the board receives the petition for recognition of an appropriate negotiating unit, it should, at an open meeting, review the unit description and, if acceptable, approve the negotiating unit. Recently, I have received inquiries from our member districts as to which employees are “teachers” for purposes of negotiations. Typically, the petition submitted by the teachers should define the negotiating unit as “all employees licensed to teach by the Education Standards and Practices Board or approved to teach by the Education Standards and Practices Board and employed by the school board primarily as classroom teachers.” This is the definition of “teacher” set forth in NDCC chapter 15.1-16 (Teacher Representation and Negotiation). It is important to appropriately define the negotiating unit so that it is clear who the board is negotiating with and who will be subject to the terms of the negotiated agreement eventually reached between the parties.

At first blush, it may seem clear as to who is and who is not a teacher. This is not always the case. The primary example of this relates to the school counselor. Most would not consider a school counselor as someone “primarily employed as a classroom teacher.”

However, as confirmed by the North Dakota Supreme Court in Hilton v. North Dakota Education Association (N.D. 2002), counselors who are certificated under NDCC chapter 15-36 (the predecessor to NDCC chapter 15.1-13) and who do not devote more than fifty percent of their time to administration duties are teachers for purposes of the teachers’ representation and negotiation law. As to other employees, the issue is clearer. Neither classified staff members nor administrators should be part of the negotiating unit comprised of teachers. Administrators may form their own negotiating unit and request to be recognized by the board; however, it should be a separate process from the teachers.

Once the board has recognized the appropriate negotiating unit, the unit must choose a representative organization to negotiate on its behalf and file a petition with the school board asserting that the organization represents a majority of the teachers within the unit. Again, this request is often times combined with the initial request to recognize the negotiating unit. Teachers must sign up to be represented by the organization. The petition filed with the board must be accompanied by evidence (i.e., a list of signatures) substantiating that the organization represents a majority of teachers within the negotiating unit. In this instance, a majority means 50 percent of the negotiating unit plus 1.

If the representative organization does not represent a majority of teachers, it cannot be recognized.

In most instances, the representative organization requesting to be recognized will be the local teachers' association, although this is not required. Any organization that represents a majority of the individuals in the negotiating unit can petition to be recognized. Indeed, North Dakota law contemplates a situation where there may be multiple groups that want to be recognized. NDCC 15.1-16-11(2) provides: "[i]f any organization has an interest in representing a group of teachers or a group of administrators and wishes to contest the claim of representation made in the petition under subsection 1, the contesting organization must file with the board of the school district a petition containing a written statement of contest together with substantiating evidence, within ten days from the date on which the board posted the notice of intent to consider the original petition."

Within ten (10) days of receipt of the petition for recognition by the representative organization, the board is required to post notice of its intent to consider the petition in each school within the district wherein members of the negotiating unit are employed. Once the notice of intent is posted, the board must act on the petition no sooner than ten (10) days and no later than twenty (20) days from the date of posting. Unless the board finds in good faith that there is a reasonable doubt that representation exists and if the petition is not contested, the board must recognize the petitioner as the representative organization. Once the representative organization is recognized, the board must post notice of its determination in each school wherein members of the negotiating unit are employed. At that point, the recognition process is complete and negotiations must begin within thirty (30) days, unless both sides agree otherwise.

It bears repeating – it is very important that the above-referenced steps are followed and all deadlines met. If not, it is possible that negotiations would not move forward or it could open up the possibility of a claim that the representative organization is not authorized to negotiate on behalf of the negotiating unit or that the negotiated agreement is invalid. It is also important to strictly adhere to the meeting notice requirements set forth in NDCC chapter 44-04. NDSBA has prepared a Negotiations Basics Handbook that provides valuable information to assist school boards through the negotiation process. Please contact us if you are interested in receiving a copy.
